Once your pet is under anesthesia, our Doctors and Dental Technicians will be able to perform a more complete oral exam. During this oral exam we may find teeth that need to be radiographs and/or extracted that were not obvious on the initial dental exam.

Digital Dental Radiographs

Dental x-rays, or radiography, has greatly enhanced the way we, practice veterinary dentistry. So much of dental disease, such as periodontal disease, tooth root abscesses, jaw fractures, tumors, etc., occurs below the gum line that only can be found with dental radiography. Dental radiography also allows for diagnosis of certain diseases, plan for the appropriate treatment as well as monitoring for treatment success. It will help us stage teeth for further treatment

We require full mouth dental radiographs on all pets when they are having their dental cleaning done. We may find abnormal teeth that were not visible during the complete oral exam. The cost for full mouth diagnostic radiographs will be detailed on your estimate. Post extraction radiographs are an additional fee and will also be on your estimate.

In order to prevent excessive anesthesia time please indicate how you would like us to contact you and/or proceed with your pet's dental. If any issue outside of the estimate arise, we will make all appropriate efforts to reach you via phone with an updated estimate/plan.
